Author and gardener Eric Bergeson at NELL program May 2

Eric Bergeson has recently published "Successful Gardening on the Northern Prairie" which is the first comprehensive yard and gardening guide for gardeners in cold climates and alkaline soils. Covering trees, shrubs, fruits, annuals, perennials and vegetables, Successful Gardening provides 326 pages of easy-to-understand, common-sense tips specific to a region ignored by the national gardening media.

Eric Bergeson has been involved in the nursery business all of his life. He owned Bergeson Nursery, a business started by his grandfather Melvin in 1936, for seventeen years. He has spoken to hundreds of groups about gardening, and was host of cable television's Little Garden on the Prairie.

This program will be held on May 2 at 9:30 am at the Faith Lutheran Church in Bagley. Light refreshments served at 9am. NELL programs are free and open to all ages.

also acknowledge Mary Shelley's literary work "Frankenstein," which was completed on January 1, 1818, with a band arrangement of Edgar Winter's hit of the same name.

Letting God Do His Job

Usually, my writings grow out of a thought or impression that follows me over the course of several days. Lately, I've been running so fast trying to keep up with life that a thought flies out of my head before it has a chance to take root. But for now, I'll let you in on something that did.

Go back with me several summers. We owned our small-town home only a short while but quickly fell in love with the idea of raising a family here. We felt we lived in a real-life Mayberry, in the best sense of the expression. The people were kind, the town was clean, and the opportunities were perfect.

These happy thoughts were percolating while I was out for an early-morning jog, trying to beat the heat one July morning. My usual route took me past the town park where the carnival was setting up in anticipation of a festival that weekend.

Now, I've never spent much time thinking about carnival workers and their lives. I've seen some flicks and heard some stories about the rough life they lead but that was about all I knew. Suddenly, a thought surfaced: I wonder what they think of our town?

And just as quickly another thought followed. Of course they know what a lovely town this is, and what nice people we are!

Then, out of nowhere, a third thought stopped me in my tracks. How would they know? What if your town is just another stop to them? Another weekend to make pay?

And finally, What if they didn't even like being here in my town?

Well, I didn't like bothering with such uncomfortable thoughts. After all, I was still a new-comer. What could I do?

I finished my jog and conveniently forgot all about the whole thing...until this past summer when the same thing happened all over again. This time, I listened more closely.

How does one reach out to a carnival worker? What are their needs? What have others done?

Digging deeper, I came across a connection via the internet, and soon had the necessary link.

Gathering my courage, I dialed the number and listened closely.

After some chit-chat, I was able to ask the key question, "What do I need to know?"

By the end of our conversation, I had what I needed and more.

Thus, it has begun. I contacted our festival board and the area churches, and in the mean time, I wait, and I pray.

It's scary not knowing what will happen. I can only step out in what I believe to be the path I've been asked to follow.

It seems God has been asking me to do that sort of thing more often lately...do what I am supposed to do and leave the rest to Him.

It's tough letting God do His job. But it's much less work than doing it for Him.

(Dianna and little family live in the idyllic town of Edgerton, Minnesota. You may enjoy the full article at: <https://angelkist.blogspot.com/.../letting-god-do-his-job.html>)

Ask a Trooper

by Sgt. Jesse Grabow Minnesota State Patrol

does not work. Is there a law that that says a vehicle must have a working horn and when it can be used?

Answer: According to state law, your vehicle must have a horn that's "in good working order and capable of emitting sound audible under normal conditions from a distance of not less than 200 feet. The horn or other warning device must not emit an unreasonably loud or harsh sound or a whistle." I believe the definition of whistle is quite clear, and use common sense to determine if a horn is unreasonably loud or harsh. If it's too loud or harsh, it could violate a local noise ordinance. Minnesota law says it's legal to honk a horn when it's "reasonably necessary to insure safe operation" on the road. For example, that'd include warning other vehicles, pedestrians or animals as needed to avoid a crash.

If it's not a safety situation, it's illegal to honk the horn on the road. Excessive or illegal use of the horn could result in a road rage scenario, so only use it when needed for safety.

A portion of state statutes were used with permission from the Office of the Revisor of Statutes. If you have any questions concerning traffic related laws or issues in Minnesota, send your questions to Trp. Jesse Grabow - Minnesota State Patrol at 1000 Highway 10 West, Detroit Lakes, MN 56501-2205. (You can follow him on Twitter @MSPPIO_NW or reach him at, jesse.grabow@state.mn.us).

Services for George W. McReynolds

George W. McReynolds, 89, Green Valley, Arizona passed away at The Villas at Green Valley, February 23, 2018.

George was born on November 10, 1928 to Clarence and Doris McReynolds.

He was a beekeeper, school teacher, school administrator, scout master and volunteer firefighter. He faithfully served community and church, being involved in numerous organizations both in Clearbrook and, after he retired, in Green Valley.

He was married to Margaret (Haltermann) for 62 years.

His greatest joy was his family, and he was affectionately called “Grandpa George Tic-Tacs” by his great-grandchildren. He had a zest for life, always curious, always learning, ever sharing his passions with others, never slowing down.

He is survived by daughter Susan Montague, sons Robert (Jenny) and Lee (Kathy); eight grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren, all of Minnesota; and special friend Joyce Van Dyk of Green Valley.

He was preceded in death by parents Clarence and Doris, wife of 62 years Margaret Haltermann, sister Mavis Brown, and brother Stanley.

A memorial service will be held on Saturday, May 5, 2018 at 11:00 a.m at Country Faith Church in Clearbrook, MN.

Memorials may be made to the Gideons International or to the Shepherd’s Fold Preschool, located at Green Valley Baptist Church, Green Valley, Arizona.

Weichert was her starting place where she had to once again start from scratch. After years of hard work and putting forth her passion to help others, Wendy earned many awards and became a prominent realtor in Virginia. Although the stress was immense at times, she always spoke highly of her new career because it exposed her to so many new people who would become close friends. She made it clear how rewarding it was for her to see happy clients, and how important it was to make home buying as easy as possible.

In her free time Wendy loved anything that involved nature, friends, family, and seeing new places. Whether it was camping, hiking, laying on the beach, being out on the water, jumping on hay bales, riding four-wheelers, touring museums, forts, or light-houses: she always loved to be active and out soaking up the sun or learning something new. Each trip she made the most out of by cramming our schedule full of new activities. Being such a busy gal, her go to lunch was always a sandwich, chips, and an ice-cold mountain dew which she would drink every day at noon. It was common knowledge at the Thrane house that you don’t take the last Dew in the fridge, or you might risk facing her knowledge of self-defense or kickboxing from classes she has taken.

Everyone that knew her can say Wendy had a true lust for life. Her positive attitude and mindfulness could bring light to any situation, and she was a firm believer that we think things into reality. Her balance with work, family, and friends was remarkable, and a skill we should all strive to master. She was the glue that held so many amazing people in contact. Being thousands of miles away from home was a challenge she took head on, and made sure to make time for visits as frequently as possible. Wendy was the type of person who knew the life she wanted to live and would make it happen, all while making time to watch the sunset and enjoy the small things.

Survived by her husband, Jeffrey Thrane of Front Royal, VA; daughter, Ariel Berry of Lynchburg, VA; son, Austin Thrane of Front Royal, VA; parents, Howard and Linda Hanson of Trail; sister, Joanne Hanson Olson of Thief River Falls; brother, Dean Hanson and wife Naomi of Trail; nieces and nephews, Wyatt Olson of Thief River Falls, Tyler Hanson of Trail, Faith Hanson of Trail, Clancy Hanson of Trail, Carter Hanson of Trail, Gracie Hanson of Trail, and Tucker Hanson of Trail; along with aunts, uncles and cousins.

Wendy was preceded in death by her grandparents, Lloyd and Lorraine Watne, Harry and Nora Hanson and brother, Luane Hanson.

Arrangements with Johnson Funeral Service, Red Lake Falls and Oklee.

The General

By Auctioneer Eric W. Mickelson

The Cleveland Tractor Company (Cletrac) started out making track tractors. The Model HG having 19hp was built from 1939-1944. At about the same time they took a stab at building a wheel tractor, the result was the Cletrac General! The Generals were painted a pale orange color and named the Model GG. A few of these Generals were sold in Canada during WW II by Massey Harris.

The Generals had a very basic design but, I can see they would be a handy little farm tractor in the early 1940s. There 4 cylinder engine produced about 19 hp. The factory was located in Cleveland, Ohio. In 1942, Cletrac sold the rights of their wheel tractor, The General, to Avery. The General became the Avery model A. In 1951, B.F. Avery was purchased by Minneapolis Moline.

Quite a history. The Cletrac Company trying a wheel tractor, then a take over by Avery, and finally taken over by MM! If you ever see a little General Tractor.....give it a SALUTE!

The DNR concluded in the most recent survey that the mid-winter pack size for 2016-17 was 4.8 wolves. That number has varied little since 1988, ranging from 4.3 (2014) to 5.6 (1989).

Running the numbers

With those three estimates in hand, the DNR estimated that there were 508 wolf packs in Minnesota during winter 2016-17. When they multiplied 508 by 4.8 (the average pack size), they came to 2,438 'pack wolves.'

In addition, it is assumed that the overall population contains an additional 15 percent lone wolves temporarily unaffiliated with any pack. When those figures were added up and all the various calculations were tabulated, the DNR came to its estimate of 2,856 wolves, or four wolves per 100 square miles of occupied range.

The margin of error in the studies is typically in the range of +/- 500 wolves. That means that if the estimate formulated by the DNR comes out to 2,850, the count could range from between 2,350 and 3,350, a difference of 1,000 wolves.

"The Minnesota DNR annual wolf counts represent some of the most accurate and reliable in the country," said Dave Mech, a USGS senior research scientist who has studied wolves for 60 years.

The International Wolf Center aims to educate the public about wolves. It publishes International Wolf magazine, offers outreach programs to schools and operates an interpretive center in Ely with a pack of resident gray wolves. For more information on the Center, visit wolf.org.

It's an important question to answer, as it carries a lot of weight when it comes to managing wolves

2,856 wolves! That was the latest Minnesota Department of Natural Resources estimate of Minnesota's wolf population in winter 2016-2017. That important number drives a significant amount of discussion related to the management of gray wolves in Minnesota.

How is that estimate made? It carries with it a lot of weight: Population goals were set to mark wolf recovery, and the success or failure of that recovery is measured by those estimates. Thus it's important to understand what is behind it.

"Knowledge of these annual population numbers is vital to effective wildlife management, but gaining that knowledge is not easy," said Rob Schultz, executive director of the International Wolf Center. "Free-roaming wolves are rarely seen, are more active at night, live in very wild places, roam widely and exist in low densities."

All wolf counts are made during winter when the populations are close to their lowest in the annual cycle after reproducing in spring and sustaining mortality throughout the year.

Direct counts of wolves are difficult; they're attempted when the area of census is small, as in the case of Isle Royale National Park in Lake Superior, 210 square miles. In Minnesota's 27,570 square-mile wolf range, DNR and collaborators study packs in numerous study areas, and then use that data to extrapolate findings to the wolf population across the entire range.

"Methods used to count wolves vary depending on funding, difficulty of terrain and weather conditions," Schultz said. "Winter snow-track surveys, monitoring radio-collared wolves or a combination of these methods are standard. Citizen reports, carcass retrievals, trail cameras and other techniques are also used across the U.S.

Managing wild animals is generally the business of individual states. Where wolves have been listed as federally endangered or threatened, the U.S. government conducts their population reviews using data collected by the various states. While the state-specific methods are variable, qualitatively many rely on the same approach.

So how are the estimates made? Here's what happens in Minnesota: Formerly, the DNR estimated its wolf population about every 10 years. Since 2012, the DNR has counted wolves every year. Biologist John Erb explains the present approach. "I view the estimate like determining the outer boundary of a puzzle; how many puzzle pieces (pack territories) are in the puzzle, and how many wolves are on each puzzle piece."

According to a report prepared by Erb, Carolin Humpal and Barry Sampson of the DNR's Forest Wildlife Populations and Research Group, the method used to estimate the population uses three key pieces of information.

First, the DNR estimates the total area of land occupied by wolf packs. This estimate is based on information and observations from scores of conservation officers, foresters, biologists, technicians and other field workers throughout the state. This provides an estimate of "occupied range", or how big the 'puzzle boundary' is in MN.

Second, they estimate the average wolf-pack-territory size, yielding an estimate of how many pieces (packs) can fit in the puzzle.

Third, they determine mid-winter pack size, or how many wolves there are, on average, on each puzzle piece.

Because it would be impossible to radio-collar all wolf packs within the state, DNR relies on data collected from a sample of packs around the state, a collaborative effort between DNR and Federal, Tribal, and University entities. Typically about 30 to 50 wolf packs are monitored during all or part of the survey period. Average pack-territory size and mid-winter pack size were estimated from data on many of those packs.

Wolf pack range

The overall wolf range within Minnesota hasn't changed significantly since 1997-78 the DNR concluded.

"It is likely that occupied range changes on a comparatively slow timescale compared to fluctuations in average territory and pack size," the report reads. Hence, while DNR is estimating population size annually now, wolf range ('how big the puzzle is') is re-assessed only at five-year intervals. The range will be re-evaluated this winter, Erb said.

The DNR estimates (2012/13 survey) that the wolf range in Minnesota is 70,579 square kilometers (27,570 square miles) and assumes little change in recent years. However, wolf range is now being re-evaluated based on data being collected this winter.

Pack territory size

The DNR concluded that the average territory size for a wolf pack in Minnesota during 2016-17 was 139 square kilometers (54 square miles). That average is smaller than last year but not "significantly different from most estimates obtained after 1998" the DNR says.

Mid-winter pack size

To determine the average mid-winter pack size, "radio-marked wolves were repeatedly located via aircraft during winter to obtain visual counts of pack size," the report reads. "In cases where visual observations were insufficient, we also rely on any estimates of pack size based on tracks observed in the snow and trail camera images from within the pack's territory."
