When a school bus is stopped on any roadway and is displaying an extended stop signal arm and flashing red lights, the driver of a vehicle approaching the bus must stop the vehicle at least 20 feet away from the bus. The driver of the vehicle must not move until the school bus stop signal arm is retracted and the red lights are no longer flashing. School bus drivers may not use cell phones while driving.

Resistance Does Not Equal Immunity

Recently I was talking with an individual about tomatoes, with some varieties having a resistance to tomato blight and how it doesn't imply that the plants won't get the disease. Below is an article from Michelle Grabowski, U of M Extension on the subject of apple scab resistance. The information can be applied to the entire biological world and might explain an earlier call I had in Clearwater Co. with leaves dropping on a crab apple in mid-July.

Planting disease resistant plants is a great way to reduce disease problems in the garden without pesticides or the added time and labor needed for many cultural control practices. A disease resistant plant is able to defend itself against a plant pathogen. In some cases, a resistant plant is very successful in its defense and the gardener will not see any visible symptoms of disease. In other cases the plant may develop low levels of disease but is able to slow the pathogen and prevent severe damage from disease. These plants may be marketed as disease tolerant, moderately resistant, or resistant.

This year, weather conditions have been highly favorable for apple scab, a fungal disease of apple and crabapple trees. The apple scab fungus infects both leaves and fruit. Leaves have olive gray to black spots with a feathery undefined margin. Severely infected leaves turn yellow and fall off mid-summer. This year, due to weather conditions favorable for apple scab, many susceptible varieties of apple and crabapple have thin see through canopies with small piles infected leaf debris collecting on the ground below.

For a list of apple scab resistant crabapple varieties and more information about management of apple scab go to the U of M Garden home page and read the Extension publication on apple scab. <http://www.extension.umn.edu/garden/yard-garden/fruit/apple-pest-management/apple-scab/>

Soil compaction management at harvest

Compaction is often thought of as a spring problem. However, in seven of the past 10 years, parts of Minnesota have had wet soil conditions during harvest. What should a producer do when the soil is wet and harvest needs to be completed? Should producers risk significant compaction and harvest the crop or just stay off of the field? The answer is easy: harvest the crop.

Minimizing compaction under wet conditions

There are three major ways to minimize the extent of compaction at harvest. These include managing axle loads, properly inflating field equipment tires, and controlling field traffic.

Manage axle loads: Heavy axle loads and wet soil conditions will increase the depth of compaction in the soil profile. As loads increase beyond 10 tons per axle, the potential to compact the soil past the tillage layer also increases. Large 500 hp tractors, full combines, slurry tankers and grain carts can weigh between 18 and 40 tons per axle and whether equipped with tracks or tires, can create compaction down to 2 to 3 feet. Tracks and duals have better flotation than single tires. If combines or grain carts can be equipped with either of these choices, flotation would increase and allow the combine a few extra passes before getting stuck.

To minimize compaction due to the weight of the combine, combines should be unloaded on the headlands or unloaded more frequently.

Properly inflate tires: Before using any equipment in the field, it is important to check tire pressure. Not only does the proper inflation help reduce soil compaction, it also improves tractor efficiency. Studies have shown that given the same axle load, tire inflation (psi) will determine the depth and severity of compaction. Producers should check with their tire manufacturer or search the web for proper tire size and inflation rate for the carrying capacity of their equipment.

Controlled traffic: The theory behind controlled traffic is that 80 percent of the compaction occurs on the first pass through the field. Producers can use this to their advantage. While it may take awhile to replace equipment that will use the same wheel tracks, there is one piece of equipment that should receive special attention: the grain cart. The grain cart has the greatest potential to compact the soil due its large carrying capacity (>1,500 bushels) and a single axle on which to carry that weight.

Follow these tips when using a grain cart to minimize compaction:

1.Try to use the same paths across the field.

2.Use the combine's previous wheel tracks when unloading the combine.

3.After loading the grain cart, follow those tracks down the field and take the headlands back to the semi or field entrance.

4.Never diagonally cross the field. This will create multiple wheel track patterns at 80 percent compaction.

5.If semis cannot be parked on the adjoining road, they should be kept on the headlands. Semis and gravity wagons may have a lower axle load, but the tire inflation is quite high.

Managing ruts after harvest
Inevitably, fall harvest will leave some ruts in the field. How should these be managed? First, wait as long as possible to start tillage operations, so the soil can dry out as much as possible.

Second, consider tillage depth. Tilling as deep as possible to shatter smeared soil or compacted layers may seem like a logical approach. However, deeper tillage and more aggressive operations are likely to damage soil structure, ultimately leaving soil susceptible to further compaction. The soil's best natural defense against soil compaction is good soil structure.

What tillage depth is recommended for managing ruts? On sandier soils, tillage should be 6 to 8 inches deep to fill in the ruts. On heavier soils, tillage should be as shallow as possible. Even with the best management, U of M research has shown that yield losses can occur up to 3 years after ruts were created.

Summary: Soil is one of the most important factors for growing a healthy crop. Preventing soil compaction or decreasing the affected depth will enhance water infiltration and storage capacity, timeliness of field operations while decreasing plant root stress and disease potential.

Samhold-United Youth Group had a lock-in on August 13-14th. The youth brought and donated stuffed animals to the Clearbrook-Gonvick Police Department to show their support for the community. They hand out these stuffed animals to kids involved in various situations. Deputy Zach came to pick them up! Thanks to the C-G police department for all they do to keep us safe. God Bless! -Submitted Virgil Tronnes brought in some of his beautiful flowers to decorate Our Saviors Church for the events that were held during Leonard Hard Times Bash. Laurie Brien got these ready in a vase.

U of M Crookston Students "Meet Crookston through Service"

Before classes even started, students at the University of Minnesota Crookston will begin to meet their new community through an event called "Meet Crookston through Service."

On Saturday, August 20, 2016, students were at work at different locations around the community under the direction of their student orientation leader and Lisa Loegering, assistant director of community engagement on the Crookston campus.

For a complete photo gallery of "Meet Crookston through Service," visit <http://z.umn.edu/17uj>.

Sites and their respective service activities included:

- Cathedral School/Cathedral Library - Cleaning areas of the school and organizing books in the library
- Care and Share - painting rooms at the Hope House, which shelters families who are homeless
- Crookston Downtown Beautification - cleaning up downtown area (picking up any garbage in streets, lawns, and garden areas)
- Humane Society - bathing animals and walking dogs
- North Country Food Bank (Downtown location), packing food boxes
- Rydell National Wildlife Refuge - removal of invasive species
- Sun, Country, and You - pulling weeds, cleaning up and preparing for upcoming event
- Summit Apartments - cleaning windows (or some other cleaning project), then playing BINGO with and visiting residents

Leonard Hard Times Bash went off on Saturday, August 27. They were able to get the parade and the events in the evening between the showers that hit the area. 23 children were the lucky winners of bikes that were given away by various organizations last Saturday as well.

We will be closed at the newspaper office on Monday, September 5 for Labor Day. We will print the papers one day later and they will be ready on Wednesday afternoon.

A reminder that we collect used eye glasses in our office in Gonvick and at the Clearbrook-Leonard Senior Center. We do this for the Gonvick Lions Club and they are put to very good use.

From my mail...

Joke Time..

Ole was in trouble. He forgot his wedding anniversary. Lena was really angry. She told him "Tomorrow morning, I expect to find a gift in the driveway that goes from 0 to 200 in 6 seconds AND IT BETTER BE THERE!" The next morning Ole got up early and left for work. When Lena woke up, Lena looked out the window and sure enough there was a box gift-wrapped in the middle of the driveway. Confused, Lena put on her robe and ran out to the driveway, brought the box back in the house. Lena opened it and found a brand new bathroom scale. Ole has been missing since Friday.

To the Residents of Clover Township

The regular meeting will be held at 5:30 pm Sept. 12, 2016 at the Clover Town Hall.
